“ In reflecting on Candace this past week, there were lots of memories from school that came to my mind. That smile and those sparkly blue eyes – she was always smiling. The athlete that she was – any sport, any race – she beat all the girls and the boys. But the humility she showed with that talent, she never acted like she was the best on the team. If you were her teammate and struggling with a particular skill, she’d take her time and help you to get better. Whenever she was complimented, she’d reply “Drea is better than me.” Her beautiful handwriting, our teachers cleaned “Candace Sheree Brewer” off their boards countless times. I’d like to think that occasionally someone finds her name written in a hidden spot at the school somewhere. The way she treated the people around her – social statuses meant nothing to her. She was kind to everyone, unless she saw you mistreat one of her friends. Then no one would fight harder for you than Candace. Her love for her family, even as teenagers, when most were embarrassed by their parents – she’d ask her mom to go with us on field trips. She would be excited when her mom was at the school. She’d carry Mikayla up and down the halls of the school. She would tell us that her daddy hung the moon. After all these years, I’m proud that I could call her my teammate, my classmate, and most importantly, my friend.
