“ Momma, I remember when I was very small, snuggled up in your lap, having you read to me. As time passed you had me reading to you. You taught me my ABC's and 123's and had me prepared for my first day of school. You always dressed me in cute little girlie outfits and never cut my hair. I know I rebelled as a teenager and all I would wear were jeans and t-shirts. You still made me wear my hair long. You loved me when I needed loving and you spanked me when I needed discipline. Through it all you were always there for me. You always told me how pretty I was and how smart I was and how I could do anything. I thank you Momma for all that you did. For every tear you wiped away, for every night of missed sleep you had when I was sick, for every word of encouragement, and even for every time you passed down punishment when I would do wrong or be disrespectful. You would never accept a bad grade, you would never let me tell myself I was worthless, and you could always cheer my heart whenever it was broken. No amount of words could ever begin to tell you what a wonderful mother you were. I never dreamed of life without you and I still today have problems believing that you are gone. I know you are in Heaven and I wouldn't bring you back to this old world for anything, but still, I miss you so very much and somehow I know not a day will pass that don't think about you. I often talk to you from my heart and I know you are listening. I thank God that He gave me you as a mother. As long as I live you will also. In memories and thoughts forever. One sweet day I will see your smile again and on that day I know there will be no more sorrow, no more pain, and I will spend my eternity in Heaven with you and the One that saved my soul, Jesus Christ. I know in time the circle will once again be complete and we will dwell in the House of the Lord forever. Until that day Momma when you meet me with your beautiful smile as I make my way to Heaven, I will always be loving you, missing you, and praying for all the ones you love as I know how often you prayed for all of us. Kisses and hugs forever Momma, for all eternity...your daughter..(I know you chose my name for a reason) Rose Marie
